WELCOME

Esha Bark-Jones
Show Director,
Workspace
Design Show,
Redbridge Events

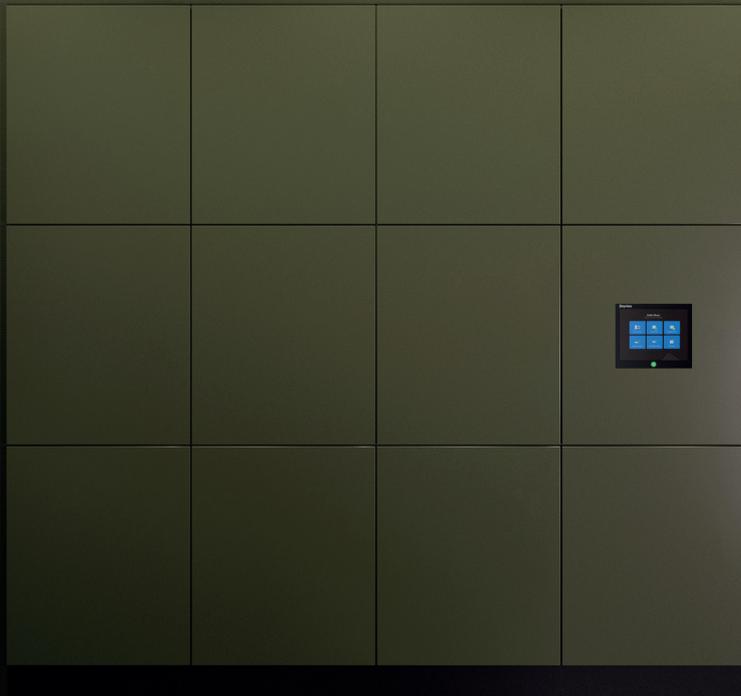

We are delighted to welcome you to the Business Design Centre for two days that will offer you the opportunity to explore our future workplaces in a numbers of different ways. This year the theme of Workspace Design Show is 'Activate the Senses', and we hope that your experience at the Show activates some of your senses while exploring the latest insights, trends, products and experiences in the world of workplace!

We've put together a great line-up of speakers at the Show again, so please take the time to stop by any of the panel discussions in our three talks lounges. Our exhibitors would love to have a chat with you to see if there may be a chance to work together on some future projects, and we also have some stunning features on show which have been designed by our wonderfully talented partners. Please do take time to speak with other attendees, the human connection in our workplaces is equally important at our Show, and you never know where a random conversation might lead!

We would like to extend a huge thank you to our team who have put the Show together, to the advisory board who play such an important role in shaping the event, to the speakers for sharing their wonderful insights, to the exhibitors for sharing some of the most transformative products in workplace interiors, to the partners for their support, and to each of you for coming to the show and being part of the experience. Everything that happens at the Show is hopefully playing a part in what unravels in the UK's workplaces in the coming years.

I really hope that you find your time here valuable, and equally importantly that you enjoy it!

OVERVIEW

It's back. Bigger and better than ever, with over 5,000 workplace professionals, including architects, designers, developers, and end-user occupiers, joining together to explore the present and future of workspace design and management.

Products

Attendees have the opportunity to engage with more than 500 innovative products spanning various categories:

Furniture: A diverse array of international manufacturers will present the latest in furniture design, emphasising solutions that enhance interaction, creativity, and employee well-being.

Lighting: Exhibitors will showcase lighting designs that influence productivity and mood, integrating natural light and focusing on the physical and mental well-being of employees.

Technology: State-of-the-art technological solutions will be highlighted, demonstrating how design and technology converge to create comfortable and productive workspaces.

Surfaces: From flooring to ceilings, a variety of materials, colours, and acoustic products will inspire new ideas for office interiors.

Features

As well as cutting edge products, the event also features experiential zones designed by leading international practices. These include The Entrance Feature by Sheppard Robson, The Design Talks Lounge by Gensler, the Wavescape Lounge by Ryder, Sense of Place by Hoare Lea, the ReClaimed Lounge by M Moser, Sensory Installation by Material Bank and the Mood Board Contest by Peldon Rose.

Talks

The show boasts a comprehensive talks programme with over 135 speakers across four key conferences

Workspace Design Talks: Delving into the latest trends and insights in workplace design, strategy, and culture.

Sustainability Talks: Featuring key figures behind leading sustainable initiatives and projects in the workplace market.

Occupiers Forum: Providing insights into how employers are creating engaging workplace experiences.

FIS Conference: Offering a platform for the latest industry thinking from the finishes and interiors sector.

Meeting up

The event will host a curated selection of creative companies dedicated to transforming traditional offices into vibrant, flexible, and inspiring spaces. As always, the show hosts a diverse range of participants showcasing innovative products and visionary concepts.

In addition to the exhibitions and talks, the Workspace Design Show offers numerous networking opportunities, including a dedicated party, providing attendees with the chance to connect, share ideas, and celebrate advancements in workspace design.

This is an unmissable event for those passionate about the evolution of work environments, offering a comprehensive look at the products, ideas, and discussions shaping the future of workplace design. W

Are we experiencing the death of the office?
Of course not. But we are seeing a new era
and a new purpose for physical space

LIFE FINDS A WAY

Betteridge's law of headlines declares that "Any headline that ends in a question mark can be answered by the word no". And so, I simultaneously ask and answer the question of whether we are really experiencing the death of the office. The demise of the office has been predicted for at least a quarter of a century, although never as much as over the last five years.

Whatever the context, the question posed about the end of offices based on the faulty premise which sees the time and location of work as a zero-sum game. So, the answer to the various miseries (and currently risks) of commuting and office life is, we are told, to work from home.

There is a lot of truth in this, for many people. But for most, there is a happy medium. The long-term effects of the last five years will involve the continuation of a pre-existing trend towards more agile forms of work that involve both traditional albeit smaller offices and other times and places.

As a consequence, we are seeing a structural change in the office market as we fit physical offices into a more abstract idea about the workplace which sees people colonising a wide range of spaces for their work. In turn, those spaces are reshaping office design in their own image, hence the influence of urban, home, hospitality and retail design on the places we work. Just look around the show and listen to the talks and chat.

Even the makers of traditional office furniture should be optimistic. I spoke recently to a workplace leader at a multi-national who told me that desks and chairs are still very much a feature of their offices, even as they open a number of new offices around the world.

The underlying need to share space with other people is not just important in terms of its practical impact on our ability to work effectively but has profound implications for our wellbeing.

As well as structuring our time and identity, work opens us up to other people. And if the toxic nature of Twitter conversations and the hoarding of toilet rolls teach us anything it should be that we need to spend more time thinking about our responsibilities to others.

So it's timely to see a study from the University of Queensland which highlights the massive benefits of relationships and daily interactions which underlines our need for physical as well as technological connections.

Loneliness and isolation are linked to poor physical and mental health. Studies have found that social disconnection poses a greater health threat than smoking, poor diet and lack of exercise.

In addition to being a factor in the development of mental health conditions such as depression, psychosis, and social anxiety, loneliness increases the risk of premature death by around 30 per cent.

Even so, perhaps the most pervasive and enduring myth about the office is that it is somehow dying off. It's a blast of guff originally farted out at the dawn of the technological revolution in the early 1990s, which has somehow lingered and been stinking the place out ever since. The essential premise behind the idea of the death of the office is that mobile technology makes it possible for us to work from 'anywhere' and so that must mean 'somewhere' is no longer needed.

It's an alluring idea, partly because it seems reasonable enough so is especially attractive if you're looking to make some bold statement about office design based on very little evidence or if you have a vested interest in getting more people to buy into the idea that it's a goner.

Below Tower Hamlets Town Hall proves that the good old desk isn't going anywhere, anytime soon

That is why you'll hear it most from PR people, journalists who haven't the time or inclination to look into the subject properly – and technology and telecoms companies.

The office has an enduring appeal for a number of reasons. One of the most commonly cited is simply that people and companies both prefer it. For employees, even the drudge of commuting, routine, noise, interruptions, annoying colleagues and lack of work life balance may be seen as a lesser evil than the idea of sitting at home, alone, for long periods. For employers, the appeal lies in creating a single identity and culture for the organisation or –if you want to be cynical – a panopticon with which to keep an eye on people.

That is not to say there isn't a balance to be struck, and we should be grateful we have the opportunity to work in a choice of ways. There's no doubt, also, that there are certain business imperatives for the uptake of flexible working including better recruitment and retention, sometimes increased productivity, work-life balance and helping parents manage their careers alongside their other responsibilities.

On the other hand, there are a number of well understood and researched reasons for us not to discard offices just yet. One is that people communicate better when they are in physical proximity to each other, a fact repeatedly underpinned by researchers such as Tom Allen at MIT.

Another reason is based on the idea that "nothing propinks like propinquity", which means that nothing fosters a close relationship better than proximity. While this phrase is often attributed to George Ball, a US Undersecretary of State in JFK's and LBJ's administrations, Ian Fleming used it as a chapter title in Diamonds are Forever. It's true that Ball popularised the idea in politics where it came to be known as the Ball Rule of Power which states that 'the more direct access you have to the president, the greater your power, no matter what your title actually is'.

This idea is also supported by research from MIT. It was first theorised by psychologists Leon Festinger, Stanley Schachter, and Kurt Back in the 1960s and has been tested a number of times down the years, not least with regard to the way that working in close proximity to other people often leads to romantic attractions.

In fact, research also shows that people who meet at work not only have more chance of getting married, but also less chance of getting divorced. One surprising aspect of this is that, as well as developing stronger relationships, people can end up mirroring the attitudes of those around them. This can have both positive and negative effects, of course, depending on what those attitudes are. For example, according to a study published by the Rotterdam School of Management, middle managers ape the ethics of their bosses, regardless of how ethical they are themselves,

The study found that this trickles down the organisation because unethical leadership at the top of an organisation is more likely to lead to middle managers treating their subordinates unfairly if the social and spatial distance between them and the top management is low.

In contrast, the effect is reversed if the social and spatial distance between managers and top management is high. Middle managers, who are unfairly treated by their bosses, will treat their employees more fairly if, for example, they are based in different offices or buildings from their managers, and the social distance is high.

These are the forces that generate the gravitational pull of the office, which are at least as powerful as those that pull us away from its embrace. Even when we don't fully understand how their pulls resolve themselves in practice, we at least have an intuition that they exist. This intuition of these forces is what drives us to keep creating and occupying the same physical spaces as other people. This is true even for those people such as the self-employed who can work freely at home but instead increasingly choose to work in co-working spaces or join co-working hubs.

Those that deny the truth of this and insist on pronouncing the death of the office are ignoring the forces that drive us as human beings to work together and the important facts that a) we like it and b) it works. Mostly.

Show Entrance designed by Sheppard Robson

Sheppard Robson is setting the stage for an immersive beginning to this year's Workspace Design Show. Visitors will embark on a journey through a thoughtfully designed entrance that engages the senses, inviting them to experience the harmony of space and creativity. With each element crafted to evoke curiosity and inspiration, this entrance feature embodies the essence of our 'Activate the Senses' theme, setting the tone for an unforgettable show experience.

Wavescape Lounge designed by Ryder Architecture

Ryder's design for this year's occupier's forum centres on the idea that sensual experiences are created by memories, encounters and feelings. The coast is a rare environment that simulates strong recollective experiences for all five senses – be it the taste of salty air or the sound of waves crashing on the shore.

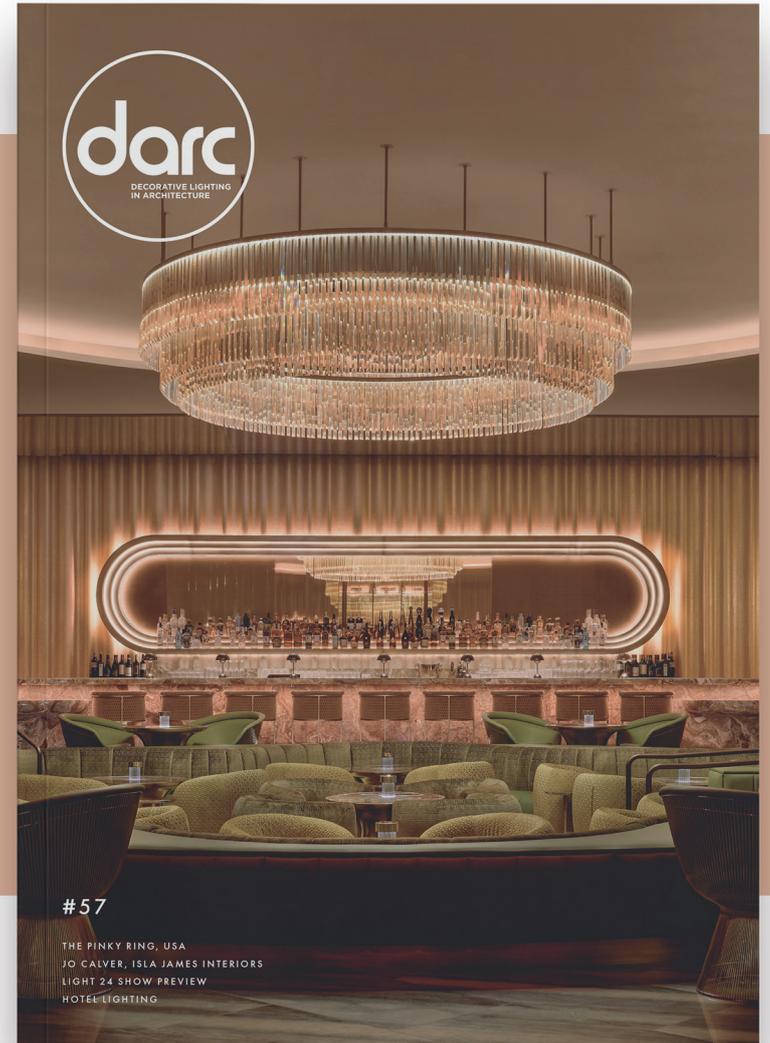

Ryder will use the beach as a lens through which to explore this year's design through visual representation and the theme of sustainability, challenging ourselves to use a palette of materials that make use of the plastic waste that threatens our ocean habitats.

The Evolving Needs of Modern Workplaces

In today's evolving workplace, security and convenience are essential. Whether managing an office or a co-working space, smart, secure storage is key. As traditional 9-to-5 offices give way to flexible environments, adaptable storage solutions are crucial for safety and efficiency. Lowe & Fletcher's smart locking systems provide businesses with the flexibility and security needed to stay ahead.

Secure, Flexible Storage: It's a Must

It is not uncommon now to see employees carrying many bags, or it could be that your office is now hot-desking, and you need lockers that can be easily assigned and accessed by different people throughout the day. In either case, having the right storage solution is critical.

Smart locking systems are designed to address these needs. They can be used for individual storage, shared spaces, or even break rooms. Beyond just being storage, they also fit seamlessly into the changing demands of the modern office.

The Power of Smart Locks

Smart locks are replacing traditional keys, offering more efficient, secure access to lockers and rooms. Solutions like digital combination locks (DCLs) and RFID locks streamline access, while the new ECHO lock takes it further.

ECHO is a groundbreaking innovation, it is battery-free, power-free, and wire-free. It uses NFC technology from mobile phones to lock and unlock with just a network or Wi-Fi connection. Whilst RFID-based locks allow employees to unlock with an ID card, eliminating the need for codes or keys and therefore increasing security.

For those looking to manage access from anywhere, remote access systems like RAS 2.0 and Zodiac offer even more control. Managers can monitor lock usage, grant, or revoke access - all through a simple web-based platform.

Lockers that Work for You: Adaptable, Secure, and Stylish

Today's offices focus on both function and employee satisfaction. Modern locks like Horizon and ECHO combine style with security, while flexible systems like Zodiac allow easy reconfiguration for shared or multipurpose spaces. These adaptable systems meet your business's evolving needs, whether for personal items or work equipment.

Ready to Take Your Workplace to the Next Level?

Whether you're looking to improve employee experience, streamline office management, or simply keep things safe, smart locking systems are an effective solution. If you want to embrace the change and are looking for a solution that is secure, efficient, flexible, and convenient, get in touch today.

Above Smart locking systems are the perfect solution for the needs of a dynamic workforce

The inaugural Amsterdam edition of The Workspace Design Show proved a huge success with companies across Europe. And it's back for 2024. Even bigger. Even better. And with all the features, new products talks, innovation and inspiration you could wish for...

Full speed ahead to Amsterdam

Following the runaway success of its 2023 launch event, Workspace Design Show in Amsterdam is set to innovate and inspire yet again when it opens its doors this November.

Bringing together world-class design and manufacturing industry excellence, the 2025 edition, which takes place in the Dutch capital from the 5th to the 6th of November will feature a stunning line-up of brands from across Europe and beyond.

The Talks programme will again platform global expertise and experience with internationally renowned speakers and practitioners from a range of professions, including architecture, design, property, facilities management, technology and sustainability.

Esha & Charlie Bark-Jones, Workspace Design Show founders, said, 'We are proud to work with such an exemplary community of international design brands and industry experts across both our London and Amsterdam shows. Providing a world-class platform that brings industry experts together to exchange knowledge and connect, with the goal of transforming the employee experience in our workplaces. We are excited to see the 2025 content developing so well with such amazing partners and design content—watch this space!'

The inaugural Workspace Design Show in Amsterdam brought together Benelux's leading designers, architects, end-user occupiers to discuss the dynamic landscape of workspace interiors, revealing key opportunities and gauging the pulse of current workplace trends. The two-day event was a huge success, both in numbers and in terms of exhibitor and visitor sentiment.

Building on the success of the Workspace Design Show in London, the new event highlighted how much appetite there is across Europe for people to come together to share ideas about the new and emerging workplace.

Over the course of the two days, more than 30,000 people from over forty countries visited the event at the RAI in Amsterdam. They were there to take part in the conference, which included twenty-five panel discussions and contributions from more than ninety speakers and the audience members themselves, of course. A broad spectrum of exhibitors also took part, showcasing the latest ideas in furniture, lighting, materials and surfaces design as well as workplace technology.

Above all this was a networking opportunity and a chance to share news and ideas. As well as the chance to meet new people and existing friends and colleagues, there were a number of immersive interactive features at the show to fire up people's imaginations.

Major European brands such as VEPA, Interface, Interstuhl, Kettal, Tarkett, Sedus, Vitra, Ahrend and other designers and manufacturers used the event to unveil new collections and spark conversations about the changing world of workplace design and management.

Visitors that attended included AECOM, de Architekten Cie, MVRDV, CBRE, Google, Meta, Rabobank, ING, KLM, Colliers, Fokkema & Partners, UNSTUDIO, D/DOCK, Booking.com, Arup and many more.

Save the date for the second edition of Workspace Design Show in Amsterdam, taking place 5 – 6 November 2025. If you are interested to be part of it, get in touch now on sales@workspaceshow.co.uk

BAG UP SOME PRIZES BEFORE YOU LEAVE!

Before you head out, make sure you don't leave empty-handed! We have lined up some exciting competitions where you can win amazing prizes just by joining the fun. Here's what's up for grabs.

Activate Your Senses Challenge

How do you engage your senses in your workspace or favourite creative space? We want to see!

Join our Activate Your Senses Challenge and showcase the sights, sounds, smells, textures, and even tastes that inspire you daily.

Post a photo or video of your sensory-driven environment and tell us what makes it special—whether it's vibrant colours, soothing sounds, or aromatic plants, we want to know how you activate your senses!

Here's how to participate:

1. Post your photo or video showing off your sensory-rich space.
2. Describe the sensory elements you're highlighting (colours, sounds, textures, etc.).
3. Use the hashtag

#ActivateYourSensesChallenge to enter and boost your chances of being featured!

Exciting prizes up for grabs from our brilliant exhibitors, including design store gift vouchers, expert consultations, and sensory-themed goodies!

The most creative and engaging entries will be featured on our social media and website, so don't miss this chance to share your inspiration with the world. Ready to activate your senses?
